

Juvenile Firesetter Intervention Program

Making a Decision to Get Help

Being a parent is a physically and emotionally demanding job. Among other difficult decisions, parents find themselves in a position of deciding whether their child's fireplay or firesetting behavior necessitates intervention.

When making a decision regarding professional help for firesetting behavior, always err on the side of safety. No matter if your concern is small or large, attending a Juvenile Firesetter Intervention program will provide you with a better understanding of your child's potential firesetting risks. You will also receive important fire prevention information and education useful to all families. If your child has a serious firesetting problem, your decision to get help could be a life-saving one.
